INTRODUCTION.

IN issuing this pamphlet, the editors beg leave to make a brief statement justifying its preparation.

In the first place, several of our relatives, having become interested, partly through the Memoir of Dr. James Jackson, in the lives and fortunes of the earlier members of our clan, expressed a wish to learn something further in detail of its more recent branchings. It was to meet this wish that we began gathering the names of Jonathan and Hannah's numerous descendants, numbering, up to the present day, nearly four hundred. But this task soon suggested another,—that, namely, of supplementing the list of Jonathan's Jackson-ancestors, as given in the Memoir, by similar notices of his progenitors on the Quincy side, as well as of the maternal ancestors of Hannah Tracy. The inquiry necessary for this purpose brought out the fact of our kinship with a series of interesting personages, several of whom rendered useful public service in the early days of our colonial and national history; and although the laws of heredity may not justify us in looking for distinct evidences of either the bodily or the mental characteristics of our Dudley, Cotton, Hutchinson, Savage, Hoar, or Gookin forbears, among our kinsmen of the present day, yet—even though we be not Scotchmen—it is but natural that we should feel a warmer glow at the mention of those honored names for the knowledge that the red line of direct descent runs through those who bore them to ourselves.

There was also another reason for publishing a supplement to the Memoir of Dr. Jackson, namely, that in that volume, through an accident in the final reviewing of the manuscript, the account of the well-known first marriage of Jonathan Jackson to Sarah Barnard, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Barnard of Salem, though it had been carefully written out, failed to get into print. The third marriage of Capt. Patrick Tracy, to Mary, widow of Michael Dalton, was also unreported, and indeed was not known to the editors until recently. In the present pamphlet these omissions are made good and a few additional facts of interest are recorded.

Since the publication of the Memoir we have had the privilege of consulting an important series of about fifty letters, written by Jonathan Jackson to his sister Mary Wendell and her husband, Hon. Oliver Wendell, during a period of more than twenty years, between 1760 and 1782. These letters were collected by a careful and appreciative student of the history of Essex County, the late William P. Upham, Esq., of Newton, great-grandson of Oliver and Mary Wendell and cousin to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, and are now in the possession of Mr. Upham's widow, to whose courtesy we owe the opportunity of reading them. Some of the letters, which bear especially on affairs connected with the Revolution, have been published by the Essex Institute, but many others of considerable interest to family genealogists still remain in manuscript. It is interesting, through these letters, to watch the gradual unfolding of his character in the course of these important years. We see him first as an affectionate older brother, showering his sister Mary, then on the point of marriage, with long and rather pompous epistles, containing much edifying counsel, together with careful instructions about the preparation of his own ruffled shirts, which she, living in the metropolis, was expected to supervise. Later he appears as a man of business and affairs, not a great leader but a faithful public servant, having a full sense of his responsibilities toward town and nation. The sketch of Jonathan Jackson and his later letters, published in the Memoir of Dr. James Jackson, give a fuller account of valuable services in the formation of the new government. The correspondence brings out strongly the fact of his intimacy with several persons of intelligence and public spirit, especially Judge Wendell himself, John Lowell, Martin Brimmer, John Bromfield (with whom he was for a time in partnership), and Mr. Sewall.

From this same source also it is possible to learn something more of Jonathan's first wife, Sarah Barnard, and of their child Edward. There is a gap of about two years in the series of letters, covering the period of their engagement and marriage, but a number of them, written shortly after these events, describe the progress of his wife's fatal illness — consumption — and give proof of the warmth of his affection toward her.

In these same letters there are frequent references to their son Edward, whose existence was unknown to the writer at the time of the publication of the Memoir. They tell of the boy being placed by Jonathan under the care of his sister Mary Wendell, at the time of Sarah Barnard Jackson's death, and show that he (as, later, his younger half-brother Robert) was a frequent visitor at Judge Wendell's house and the playmate of his children, the oldest of whom bore the same name with him, that of the grandfather of them both.

Edward seems to have been a promising boy, and to have been held in great affection by his father. After Jonathan's second marriage his child became one of the household of the young wife; and a letter from him to Judge Wendell, written when he was about eight years old, is printed in the publications of the Essex Institute, Vol. XIII.

In April, 1777, his father Jonathan writes (also to Judge Wendell) "Ned sets off tomorrow morning to Marbleh^d to take the small-pox," — a custom of that period which antedated that of vaccination, — and a letter of May 8th adds, "Ned is now under inoculation at Marbleh^d." It is possible that this disease proved fatal. There is a gap of three years in the series of letters at this point, and those written later contain no reference to the boy.*

Jonathan Jackson had been intimate in the family of Capt. Tracy ever since his arrival in Newburyport and the Upham letters tell of his wish to make the only daughter, Hannah, his second wife. We have learned through another source, namely, from a letter to Dr. Joshua Brackett, furnished us through the kindness of Mrs. George Putnam, how, wishing to lose no time and to avoid the fatigue of wedding festivities, the happy couple, having received the consent of the bride's father, planned that the ceremony should take place informally and at once, not at Newburyport but at a neighboring town across the New Hampshire border. The Essex Gazette of June 9th duly records the marriage as having occurred at Hampton Falls on June the 1st, 1772. The letter referred to runs as follows :

[TO DR. JOSHUA BRACKETT, PORTSMOUTH.]

Newburyport Friday Noon 29th May 1772.

Dear Sir, —

The Bearer of this comes upon a Message I would not wish he might catch the least suspicion of — the State of my own Health & Miss Hannah's make it eligible if not necessary for us to take a long Journey, & we have no time to spare, the Season is so far advanced — I have therefore urged some days past with great Earnestness, a Consummation of the Designs we have had in view this some time past, & have I think gained the Consent of all parties — the friendly Office I ask of you is to procure me a License & forward it by the Bearer — let it be inclosed. I am myself quite unacquainted with the method practised in granting them & what are the requisites I have been told the Ages of the Parties should be given in — if so, let it be known the Lady has lately passed seventeen, and that I am not quite twenty-nine. Capt Tracy suggesting that his Consent might be required by his Excellency, you have inclosed a Billet to him with Mr Tracy's Signing — likewise inclosed you have 4 half Gu^{as} to discharge the Fees — you will oblige me to be as snug as may be in your application, as we would not wish to have the affair known here; till completed — we propose to be at Sanborn's on Monday, if fair, if not on Tuesday, to dine — we give no Invitations — with my kindest Regard to Mrs. Brackett, if it be convenient to you, you may travel that road that day you know — “Verbum sapienti sat est” — should I have omitted anything necessary to the procuring a License, you will dispatch the Messenger back on Saturday as early as may be —

With much Respect I am Sir

Your Friend & very obedt Servt

JON^A JACKSON

P. S. If there be no Occasion, I should rather you would not deliver the Letter to his Excell^y.

Three years after this period came the outbreak of the war, and with it the rumor that an armed vessel might any day appear at the mouth of the Merrimac to demand subsidies from the flourishing town of Newburyport.

Hannah Jackson was then the mother of two children, and her husband thought best to remove her with them and his boy Edward to the safe retreat of Exeter for a time. The threatened danger over they returned to Newburyport, and several letters written from that place to the Wendells, who were still in Boston, are of interest, as giving a picture of the times. Three of these letters follow. A little editing and the substitution of modern punctuation for the all-sufficing dashes of that day would have made their reading easier. We have however transcribed them exactly as they stand in the original, believing that in this form they give a better idea of the writer and of the excited state of popular feeling.

[JONATHAN JACKSON TO HON. OLIVER WENDELL.]

Newburyport 8th May 1777.

Dear Sir,

I should have wrote to you by Mr. Brimmer and Mr. Lowell who set off this morning before Breakfast but I had not Time & last evening was engaged with company. I am a little alarmed for the Situation of your Town — & to be as cool & deliberate as possible in Time of danger — it seems to me all you intend to move, should be removed immediately, viz — Wives and Children and valuable effects — at least to remove the latter and secure a Retreat for the former — this done I hope every man will set about equipping himself and be determined not to quit his Ground while he can hold it with the least probability of being supported — is it not necessary therefore a Question should be put, in some way or other, to the surrounding Country for 20 or 30 miles, to know if they will give you immediate assistance upon the Alarm & what assistance they bring — viz — how many men & how well armed & under what arrangement or Regulation — is not the Board of War to be enquired of, whether they have sufficient Magazines of Provisions & military stores in & out of the Town, for 20,000 men for a month. A months subsistence or longer. Should not the lower Harbour be immediately fortified & to each Post, Men & Officers assigned & those who are determined to shew another Sullivans Island Repulse* — should not the upper Harbour, the

* The reference in the letter is to Sullivan's Island in Charleston Harbor.

On June 28, 1776, the half-finished fort on the island was attacked by several British war-vessels. Its defence was one of the most brilliant of the smaller conflicts of the Revolution. The English suffered severely in killed and wounded, and their vessels were badly damaged. By the end of the day the Americans had fired their last round of ammunition; but they had won! The English were too badly damaged and demoralized to return to the assault. The Americans were commanded by Col. Moultrie, and it was in honor of his achievement that the fort thereafter bore his name. (It was the sister-fort of Sumter.)

[For supplying us with these details we owe our thanks to Mr. J. T. Morse, Jr.]

Heights of Dorchester, & Fort Hill have their assignment of commanding officers & Men. If you can get good & approved officers to all these Posts, I don't doubt you may get men at all hazards to undertake to support them, & I believe it would have a good effect to make them swear it solemnly to each other, as I have often told you I know not what Courage I have but I would be willing to be posted where I must be shot if I deserted & every Man who intends to fight ought to be so willing. I should think the sooner you all get into military order & had your Guards posted from Point Alderton to Nahant, the better —

I hope all the disaffected Persons will soon be put off, or else not till the present risk of attack is over, by finding Burgoyne to have lit upon some other move — but in the meantime never suffer the strongly suspected ones to stay in Town unless confined under a strict Guard — Make the conveyance of intelligence to the Enemy as difficult as possible. Indeed those who wish to burn and destroy us & discover it in any Acts, after they know they may & are to depart, if Joyce Jun^r & his Associates have any use or ever ought to be Executioners, I think it would be to execute summary justice upon such Miscreants. I am at a great loss what to do at the approaching Choice should the Town chuse me one of their Representatives. I had determined not to serve another year — My own Business — if I ever intend to pursue it, my Family and Hannah's ill health all call upon me forcibly to be at home, & besides it has not appeared to me that I have influence, but with a very few Members in any Debates, let me be ever so much in the right & I hope if seldom, it has been sometimes the case. But Lowell & some other Friends before I left Boston urged my coming again much and insisted upon it I had Influence & that the Gentⁿ of the Board had frequently observed a sensible difference when a certain set of us were in the House — this would not bring me again, and I am not determined that anything shall — but this I am sensible of, that the ensuing year is the critical Crisis — threatened with a powerful invasion, yourselves called upon to furnish a large part — & supply a larger, of a large army at a distance having internal Difficulties & Dissensions not a few Jealousies between Country & City — vile practices among a few on both sides — a Medium tottering will fall to the ground if not supported in every part — and the means of that Support hitherto misunderstood & misapplied by the Legislatures this way, to go no further — a new Constitution to form or called upon for one, amidst all these confusions, but few Manufacturers in this Branch who are thorough Workmen — to be received & go down with most People it must have a good outside show to pass with the Judicious it must be thoroughly finished, Part answering to Part, & together forming one harmonious whole, in which everything will bear strict Scrutiny and Examination — & when thus framed, if not cordially adopted, & every part carefully kept to perform its Functions immediately arises Disorder, perhaps not only to that part but to the whole. Then cry the People who asked for a Constitution, we asked for some to rule over us (for they do not distinguish between the Rules they are to be governed by and those who are to rule) & behold what have you given us — in short when I take a view of these Matters, I shudder, & when I think any good can be done by me, I feel the Duty powerfully — for to desert the Ship in such a Storm or lay by as an inactive Passenger sometimes appears to me like Poltroonerie of the basest kind — & that if I am offered the opp^ty of serving & refuse I have no right to find fault with Measures of any who may — but when I consider again, it is a chance, from Hannah's ill health, if I can attend half my Time, & in undertaking it, I must give up every idea of pursuing Business myself — & if so interrupted by Hannah's Health shall do nothing of Consequence here or there (for I think it is a great Advantage to attend the House thro' a Session) when I consider this, I say, I am not the man but it is another's Place — Dont you & Polly intend us a Visit soon? if you wish to have your Children out of Town, do send them here — & remember we have House Room enough for you all, & that you have great Claim to any part of it. Use us I beg of you, with all Freedom — You have never wrote me since I came home you chuse to keep the secret Politics between yourselves there, I suppose — as I suppose the Court will be up this week — do come next. I have made half a dozen Attempts to get a Salmon to you since I came home but have failed. I dont imagine they are now any rarity with you, tho' they with us they are still scarce & dear — for Boston is generally supplied from Dracut & up the River. Hannah's Feeling & want of Feeling* is as when she left Boston She joins me in Love to you all

Newburyport Sunday Evening

28 Oct. 1781

Dear Sir

The great Event handed to us last Friday (w^{ch} tho' expected, we had hardly dared to believe,) ought to precede in the Recognition of it to every Friend every other Address in order of Time — it is the most consequential perhaps of any during the War — when you get the particulars & any curious private Anecdotes respecting the Surrender* or any movements before if the public papers should not hand them along I hope that your Leisure will permit you to do it. Your son can be the Transcriber of them—I long to have it in all its Circumstances Our Citizens, (than whom none more loyally partake in everything tending to the welfare of America) began in half an hour after the news came into the Town on Friday (and that was between two and three,) & held it incessantly till last evening & some of them rather encroached upon the ritual decency of that — in short if bells & cannon shouts & bonfires demonstrate joy we have had our share. The Gentlemen of the Town dined [illegible] & a very decent convivial meeting we had — I suppose in feelings or expressions your patriotic [Townsmen] are not behindhand. I should have liked to have heard your rev^d Doct^r today in his Acknowledgements — though it is not to be supposed that he said one word about the French Nation or Louis the 16th — our great and good ally — the bearer of this Mr Nath^l Cutting, will send a napkin to your house I will be obliged to you to desire Lydia to put up in it my white suit of clothes rather carefully as we are to dance it here this week — give Hannah's & my love to Mrs Wendell and the children & to our boy who I hope continues a good one — he must learn to write to us before winter is out — I am dear Sir your aff^{te} friend and Bro^r

J. JACKSON.

* Surrender at Yorktown, October 19, 1781.

The engraving which we print as frontispiece represents the ancient and memorable Church of St. Dunstan, at Stepney, where Edward Jackson, the first of our American forbears, was baptized (on February 3rd, 1604/5), and where his parents, Christopher Jackson and Susan Johnson, were married (on October 5th, 1602.) The cut from which it was made was sent to us by Mr. E. Rollins Morse, who had received it from our kinswoman, Miss Edith Agnes Salter, now in London. This is perhaps as near as we are likely to come to the cradle of our race, and we have therefore added the following account, taken from W. J. Loftie's History of London :—

ST. DUNSTAN'S CHURCH, STEPNEY.

A large proportion of the manors in Middlesex belonged to the Church, and St. Paul's with its Bishop, Dean and Canons were large owners. At the time of the conquest and long after, Stepney was a centre of fashion, and great men of the Court and Church lived here. Of all the manors connected with St. Paul's the great lordship of Stepney as it was called, was the greatest. This great estate comprised many modern parishes, including Whitechapel, Bethnal Green, etc., and is in fact itself the district so often referred to as the great and terrible "east end" of London. In Domesday the Bishop's holding is set down as thirty-two hides, and he had besides many tenants some of whom held as much as five hides. The Bishop's manor house was at Bethnal Green.

The Church of St. Dunstan was built in the sixteenth century, and the dedication to St. Dunstan is manifestly later than the church itself. The old church has been much molested, but is the old church still, and contains a fine series of monuments. So far back as the beginning of the eighteenth century the fame of Stepney in this respect had penetrated westward, and we find its epitaphs quoted in both the Spectator and the Tatler. Built into the west porch is a stone carved with an inscription commencing, "Of Carthage wall I was a stone" and signed "Thomas Hughes, 1663." The fine houses which once surrounded the church have all disappeared; the neighborhood is composed of very miserable tenements. Pace, who succeeded Colet, first at Stepney and afterwards at St. Paul's, was the well known diplomatist, one of Woolsey's favorite tools, especially in his intrigues for the papal crown.

It would have been pleasant to have added, in the case of the many distinguished members of our family, the titles indicative of honors and of public service. To do this, however, would have been to plunge into a biographical enterprise of considerable magnitude. For besides those of our kinsfolk whose achievements have won public recognition there are many more whose devotion to the parts which they have found themselves called upon to play, whether as veritable helpmates, or in social work, or in the fulfillment of duties as professional or business men, has entitled them to equal recognition at the hands of the liberal historian.

Before closing we wish to express our sincere thanks to Miss A. H. Thwing, whose careful study of original records has given a permanent value to the biographical sketches of the ancestors of Jonathan Jackson and Hannah Tracy.

DUDLEY.

THOMAS¹ DUDLEY was born in 1576, in Northampton, England; died July 31, 1653, in Roxbury; married (1), Dorothy ~~Wray~~, born 1582, in England; died Dec. 27, 1643, in Roxbury; married (2), April 14, 1644, in Roxbury, Catherine (Dighton), widow of Samuel Hackburn [Hagbourne]; she married (3), Nov. 8, 1653, in Dedham, Rev. John Allen; died Aug. 29, 1671, in Dedham.

He had 6 children by his first wife, and 3 by his second. Ann,² his third child and eldest daughter, married Simon¹ * Bradstreet.

Thomas Dudley acted for a time as page to Lord William Compton, later Earl of Northampton: served as Captain in the English army during the French expedition of 1597; Clerk to Judge Nichols about 1598. From 1616 to 1630 was employed as steward to Theophilus Clinton, fourth Earl of Lincoln. He emigrated in 1630 as Deputy-Governor of the Massachusetts Bay Company, and from this time until his death was, next to Winthrop, the most influential man in the colony, serving thirteen years as Deputy-Governor; four times Governor; three times one of the Commissioners of the United Colonies, and twice the President of the Commission; Sergeant Major General in 1644, the first appointee in the colony. He was chief founder of Newtowne (Cambridge), but only lived there a short time, removing to Ipswich, and about 1639, settling in Roxbury. He took an active part in the founding of Harvard College and the Roxbury Free School, — now Roxbury Latin School. His house lot was on what is now (1907) Guild Row, between Dudley and Roxbury streets. His tomb is in the Eustis Street Burying-ground.

BRADSTREET.

SIMON,¹ son of Simon Bradstreet, was born March, 1603, in Horbling, Lincolnshire, England; died March 27, 1697, in Salem; married (1), about 1628, in England, Ann Dudley, born 1612, in England; died Sept. 16, 1672, in Andover; married (2), June 6, 1676, probably in Salem, Ann (Downing), widow of Capt. Joseph Gardner, born 1634, in London; died April 19, 1713, in Salem.

He had 8 children by his first wife. Dorothy,² his second child, and eldest daughter, married Seaborn² Cotton.

Simon Bradstreet was graduated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge; he was steward in the family of the Earl of Lincoln and afterwards in that of the Countess of Warwick. He came to America in Winthrop's fleet in 1630, as one of the Assistants of the Massachusetts Bay Company. First settled in Newtowne (Cambridge), where he was on the first Board of Selectmen; removed to Ipswich, where he is mentioned as Selectman, Feb. 20, 1636/7. About 1644 he was among the first settlers of Andover, where he was Selectman from the first record of town officers until 1672, after which he passed most of his time in Salem and Boston. He was the first Secretary of the colony, Agent, for many years one of the Commissioners of the United Colonies and four times President of that body, Assistant, Deputy Governor, and Governor. In 1662 he was sent to England to congratulate Charles II upon the Restoration. He was President of the Council for the Safety of the People in 1689, Councillor in 1692, having refused to serve under Andros. He was in the service of the country sixty-two years.

His first wife, Ann (Dudley), is celebrated as the first female poet in America.
